Hurricane Sandy Devastates Eastern Cuba: How You Can Help

Posted: 01 Nov 2012 12:53 PM PDT

While many of us are facing the difficult task of rebuilding after Hurricane Sandy's devastation along the north Atlantic coast, there are many others who face this undertaking with few or no resources, even without food reserves to face the days that have followed. Those living in Cuba's second largest city, Santiago de Cuba, and in other towns in eastern Cuba were directly hit by Sandy's wrath a few days before she reached the shores of the United States. On October 25, winds of 110 miles per hour devastated homes, businesses, and agriculture in the eastern provinces of Cuba for up to five hours. Now the Cuban people, just like many here in the United States, are in the recovery stages.
